SIMMONS COLLEGE, BOSTON

Edited by the Senior Class, 1956

DEDICATED TO A NEW ERA OF GROWTH

You didn't know Dr. Park for long —not as long as those who come after you will know him—but you learned a great deal about him in one short year. There was his inspiring record at Northfield, his leadership and the installation address that strengthened your confidence in him. And the longer you knew him, the more that confidence grew.

During the year you passed him in the hall, saw him conferring with faculty members, stopped and spoke to him yourself, thinking how friendly he was and how interested in Simmons.

There were his other activities outside the Simmons microcosm, as Chairman of the State Board of Education.

And so, when it came time to dedicate the memorial of your year at Simmons, you gave it, in appreciation, to Dr. William Park—who made that last year one of the most memorable.

SIMMONS COLLEGE LIBRARY

This is the city as you remember it . . . lights strung along the windings of the Charles . . . the time chiseled skylines of red brick, and under your feet the cobble pavements that time and history have walked . . . And each place had its own special season . . . summer was boating on the Charles, and autumn dappled the lawns of Beacon Hill. There was the stark black and white of the winter Common, and the pale green of spring in the Fens . . . Today and Tomorrow and Yesterday, all part of the sun-splashed, rain-pelted world. And in the world called Boston, the microcosm — the little world of Simmons — the fifteen hundred women with their own past, their present in the city, and their dreams beyond . . .

NEWS, as you recall it, was a Thursday afternoon joy after Tuesday's Armageddon — Last-minute rush to a typewriter with a scoop—cigarette smoke in the room marked "editor"—staff conferences in the cafeteria — and "originals" and the Thursday smell of fresh ink and lugging copies to the dorm—all combining miraculously to catch the flavor of Simmons in one issue a week—in four small pages.

Editor and Asst.: Norma Bornstein Rooks, Sally Gelston.

News, Technical Staff: Dezija Blumit, Carol Collins, Peggy Sasseville, Jill Goldstein, Janice Powell.

Mic: Layout Editors: Phyllis Goldberg, Janice Powell.

Editor and Asst.: Nancy Riva Montgomery, Cynthia Whiting.

And why Microcosm? Mic is a record of your four Simmons years—worth the struggles with deadlines, the worry, and the midnight lamps—the trips to the printer and proof-reading and all the rest—because in it was everything from the first day of orientation. For when you leave the little world for the last time, only knowledge and memory go with you.

Mic Staff: Janice Powell, Joanne Blanchard, Ardis Stein, Sally Gardner, Liz Reed. Seated: Ellen Elliott, Cynthia Whiting, Phyllis Goldberg.

And

People

anything

else, Simmons

One of your first impressions of Simmons was the friendliness in Dean Clifton's welcoming speech that first frantic week—and from then on you felt that she always noticed you. There was her Bulletin Board with announcements of plays—of scholarships, of College events—and her office was always open to a problem—large or small. It was Dean Clifton's guidance that shaped the little world.

The rest of the Administration helped the little world to run well—Miss Deacon worked with the Review, and was always glad to help a student-in-need . . . The little group in the President's office was always on hand in an emergency, always at the College late into the evening, ironing out the problems of the past day . . . And the women in the Placement Office, faced with the task of finding summer and permanent jobs for you. They bucked you up when there was no job prospect in sight and they were happy with you when you landed what you wanted . . . Yes, all these people were an important part of the microcosm.

Miss Helen Deacon

Mrs. Bullwinkel, Miss Hanson and Mrs. Mack.

Adm.: Mr. Needham, Mr. Bachelder, Mr. Deane, Mrs. Chapman.

Miss Chrysler

Mrs. Arvidson

Mrs. Feeney

You remember the women of the little world, a bit nostalgically. Theater tickets, coffee, and cigarettes in Miss Chrysler's round-the-world sitting-room — and cold pills and comfort day or night in the Infirmary with Mrs. Feeney—Miss Freidli's delightful little smile which only partly showed her endless patience and tact—and Dr. Rodwell, who somehow managed to bring charm and wit into the clinical world of biology. All of them were different—their jobs, their way of life, their personalities—but they were, to you, all alike in one way—symbols of the Simmons woman at her best.

Miss Grant

Which twin has the Toni, Mr. Shepro?

Conference—Mr. Johnson and Mr. Hawthorne

The men in the little world—the profs you spent hours a week with and thought you had typed almost perfectly after four years' experience. And the history department—coffee-tasting bull sessions in the cafeteria, defending Mill against Marx or Bentham from Bentley—that, no matter how else you remember him, was Mr. Hawthorne. And labs with Mr. Shepro—or hours behind footlights with dust in your nose and advice in your ears. You remember the sophomore classes in sociology with Mr. Johnson—and the conferences any time during the day if he wasn't reading with his special air of engrossed abstraction. History, biology, sociology — the abstract and the practical, the "fine" and the "applied"—Simmons.

You remember the English office primarily as an odor of pipesmoke—for it clung to everything, somehow—papers and chairs and the walls themselves. It was in your nostrils when you turned in a theme—at the last possible moment—and when you went, trembling, for a conference with Mr. Sypher or Mr. Miller. And you remember their classes, those two, with a special joy. They gave you insight into the world of man in all its deepest, broadest beauty—in early morning classes and cramped offices, surrounded by the odor of Old Briar. So that now wisdom and beauty are for you inseparably part of the savor of a pipe.

Mr. Sypher

Mr. Miller

Walter and Joe

You remember Joe and Walter, the indispensable cogs that helped make the little world run smoothly—saving you the long climb to the library early in the morning to return reserve books, setting up extra chairs for meetings in the Lounge, mowing the grass in the spring and keeping the walks clear and sanded in winter, dusting furniture and polishing brass with loving care. You remember the sudden spatter of the hose against the windows, livening up your classes. You remember, too, as you think of Joe and Walter, the smiles and friendly hello's they always had for everyone.

The Bookstore rush slows down.

Coffee break in the Cafeteria

You remember the mad rush to buy books at the beginning of every semester—getting into the "supplies" line when you needed books and vice versa. Of course you forgot the titles of the things just as you got to the head of the line—so you had to look at the list again. The second time, you wrote down the titles, and started over at the end of the line. Success at last!—and you staggered toward the cafeteria with an armload of fresh, new knowledge.

And the old Freshman Campus where you started out —the half-hour walk in the early morning—the long drag home to dinner—and private fun.

This little world is, for you, a world of remembered things.

The last graduation of President Beatley's tenure—with the solemnity of its academic procession, its quiet pride, and its subdued sense of loss.

And the dust and confusion and noise of construction your sophomore year, when the new halls were going up on the Brookline Avenue campus.

The fun at Olde English Dinner . . . the fierce figure of the dragon, cowed by Saint George . . . the psuedo-Greek chorus . . . and the filling dinner.

And wondering whether 'twas nobler to mount those four flights and return a book on time, or suffer a fine till you had the courage—and strength.

Business School . . . that was sound—clatter of typewriters in 119, syncopation upon syncopation, sharp and crisp, till all hours of the afternoon—and the mechanical prrifft and click of automatic calculators (you mastered those calculators by sheer force of will, and were always just a little afraid of their speed and brilliance)—the soft scratch of a shorthand pen on a lined paper pad as you took dictation—the harshness of a German gutteral, or a French nasal, or the richness of Spanish as you prepared to go outside with two languages at your fingertips—a whole new world to conquer. But there were courses you remember, conducted like any others in Simmons, distinguished not by sound but by content. Personnel, where you discovered the fascinating field of employee relations—Accounting, with the struggles and suffering you had to go through to balance your books—Advertising, where you gained insight into the work behind the ads you always took for granted—Business Law, in which a confusing mass of legal terms gradually became clear and logical—all of these courses gave you a real knowledge of that part of the outer world you had chosen for your own. Then too, you remember your field work, the thrilling preview to your first professional position—and from field work you realized for the first time how well the little world of Simmons had prepared you for your part in the larger world of business, and the even larger world of life.

Home Ec. meant tantalizing smells in the third floor corridor, and gleaming stoves glimpsed through doorways as you walked by. Behind the delicious odors and the sparkling kitchens—hours of chemistry and nutrition classes. And you remembered the feel of silk and wool and cotton as you cut and sewed —and your sense of pride as you tried on for the first time your own blouse. Home Ec., too, brings memories of Pilgrim House, and of studying child development first hand (ouch!) at the nursery school. Then there was your practice teaching—the terror of facing your first class. But practice teaching, like all your other courses, turned out to be fun.

SINGER

What did Library mean to you? When you came to Simmons that freshman year, it was sometimes a handy convenience, sometimes simply four flights of stairs in the blear of early morning with an armful of overdue Contemporary Society texts (at a fine of five cents each). And when you left? Then Library was something else—a proficiency, an attitude, an intimate acquaintance, a school—a part, your part, of the little world. The others looked at you strangely the first three years—you were philosopher, historian and critic, without stint and apparently without any real direction. That last year, you remember, order came forcibly from the chaos of world-discovery —order which could classify and confine and direct. You knew intimately the feel of catalogue cards under your fingers—and knew those cards were the key to all the best books the world could offer. You knew Dewey Decimal with encouraging accuracy—and library management and planning, and research. You knew the brightness of children's eyes when they met a new book—and the challenge of some vast project not your own which depended in part on your skill. And you knew that a library held the key to all man's knowledge in the vast world of his past history, his present, and his dreams—and you would be its executor.

You can remember Prince as something rather different within the little world—a special sheen, a chic, an imperceptible but evident gloss hung over your world. Straight seams and impeccable nail polish and crisp business suits—the knowledge of what was it for spring two seasons in advance was part of it called fashion. Part of it was called advertising—and part of it was called personnel, and you felt (almost) that when you graduated you could do the hiring for the finest store in the country. You remember the pungent odor of coffee at the daily coffee break—and the rustle of a formal dress at a fashion show you planned yourself. Prince—and the Christmas va- cations you worked in Filene's or Jordan's and got caught and trampled in the season's rush. You can still feel the pride in your voice when you said you were from Prince—a conscious assurance, a grace, a command of yourself, of your field of merchandising, and of others, which no other Simmons girl could match.

You remember Publication as the perfume of rubber cement in 351—you got used to that smell in your infrequent visits to the Pub office your first two years at Simmons. In those days, Pub courses seemed remote—and academic studies were immediate and important. You remember your bewilderment during the first weeks of English 22—and economics with its chaos of new ideas (which eventually fell into an organized pattern)—and history, sociology, psychology, languages, art—all vital and all interesting. Junior year, you remember, your courses began to focus on a goal—your career. There were those first-hour Graphic Arts classes—you hated to get up, but didn't dare to cut—and at the other end of the day were your Journalism classes—and Copy and Proof (Pub professors seemed to have a passion for first hours). Senior year, as you recall, you lived in two rooms—351 and 352—and you did layouts for everything—layouts with the emphasis on theoretical perfection for Layout and Design—more layouts on which you had to find room for seven more lines of Review copy—and you did a lot of writing—thousands and thousands of words—articles for Review—short stories for Advanced Composition, Advertising Copy Writing, and Publicity. You came to school carrying your T-square and a stack of children's books with your proportion wheel sticking out of your notebook—and were conscious of people staring and wondering what you were doing with that combination. Finally you put four years of learning and thirteen weeks of worry, anxiety, and hard work into a thing known as the Valz—just that. Only later did you realize how much the labor had taught you—when you started your first job—really knowing your field.

You remember many different things about the School of Nursing. First, you remember, were your chemistry and biology courses. Then came that first exciting summer session at Mass. General—the thrill of actual hospital work —the feeling that this was the real beginning of your professional career. But it was another whole year, you recall, before you returned to the hospitals for the major part of your clinical training. This year was filled with important classes at the College—more biology, of course—and you learned, too, about the workings of man's mind in your psychology and sociology courses. Finally, you began hospital training in earnest —and you remember all the hospitals so clearly—there was Mass. General again—and McLean, Children's, the Veterans Administration Hospital, and the public health agencies. You remember being on your feet for hours and hours—and how they ached so much you thought they would fall off. But you remember, too, the almost numberless fields of nursing that became, for you, people to be helped rather than just words—surgery, which you looked forward to with mingled dread and eagerness—the thrill of a nursery full of newborn babies—and of a child's smile answering yours—all of this is the School of Nursing as you remember it. You also recall, however, the times you put on "civilian clothes" and had fun—for in Nursing, as well as in the rest of the little world, good times and hard work went together.

Test tubes, formulas, skeletons, vectors—all these and much more go to make up your memories of that part of the little world which is the School of Science. You remember Chemistry as the clink of a bottle of acid against a beaker—the weighing of minute quantities in delicate scales—your frustration as you tried test after test in a vain attempt to identify an unknown—the explosion you always expected, but which never quite happened, through no fault of yours—seminars your senior year—and reading galley proofs for Mr. Bliss. Biology carries with it the recollection of labs—chemistry as well as biology—dissection kits—your first unexpected encounter with a skeleton—models of hearts and eyes—and endless muscles, nerves, and bones that you thought you would never be able to memorize. The memory of Physics, too, is an impression of a series of labs—and of your struggles with calculus—and of the awe you felt at your initiation into the mysteries of relativity. Physical Therapy is also part of the memories of the School of Science. You remember your classroom courses, biology, psychology and all the rest—then your hospital training—finally the thrill and satisfaction of actually working with people who need you—people whom you can help to have normal, happy lives.

The special quality of Social Science, as you recall it, was its broadness—the varied nature of its approach. You could go almost anywhere within it—from the very practical concerns of economics to the no less important ones of philosophy and metaphysics. You could be (and perhaps were, in your mind, sometimes an economist, an administrator in government, a sociologist in community work, or a psychologist engaged in psych measurements. And what did you learn? The mind of man—psychology, sociology, philosophy—his institutions—government, economy, religion—his history, his languages, and his arts—all of them you touched on or grappled with. You dealt, broadly or specifically, with the deepest human questions—and you knew, when you left, that the true quality of your school was service.

Remember, perhaps a little too clearly, the exquisite torture of acquaintance dances at Boy's Latin and Alumnae Hall—The hot, smoky room, and the crush, and the pain when some fool trod on your instep, and the way your crinoline showed under your dress — Recall the sharp taste of Coke, the sugar of doughnuts, and the way there were invariably three men for every girl—so you never really had to stop dancing. You swore off acquaintance dances after that first one — but you always went back anyhow—

Remember bell duty on Saturday night — a lonesome time, despite the men you let into the living-room — while your friends went out—

You remember the special flavor of

You remember the occasional vacation from dorm eating—the excursion to Jack and Marion's for submarine sandwiches or something equally indigestible.

You recall the angry buzz that announced your date before your make-up was on or your hair un-pincurled—the last-minute scramble—and the grand exit—

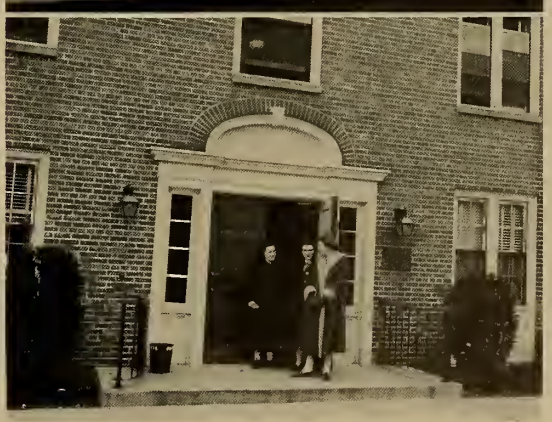
And Yueh's—weekday snacks and Saturday brunch—hours and hours of intimate or obscure conversation in the familiar brown booths—with frappes, and Yueh and John—

You remember leaving to go off on some sort of casual adventure—



dorm living—

There were the shared times — the fun

Football across the Charles—under the brilliant skies of September, and in November drizzle—blankets, banners, and marching bands—the cheering for or against last-minute touchdowns — Harvard football, that prompted you to yell, "Fight fiercely, Harvard!"—clambering down from the stands, almost as tired as the players and twice as happy—full of hot chocolate and hotdogs.

MIT, you remember, meant crossing the Charles again—meant boats in the Basin, and half a century's conglomerate architecture—meant that most practical of creatures, the MIT man.

of men's colleges almost next door

You remember the backyard parties . . . spring and fall—the warmth and wind, and wearing b e r m u d a's (legally) . . . and how you ate too much at the bakery booths and the bids you made on the professors at the 'slave market' . . . the balloons you won and the money you lost . . . all in the name of your causes . . .

And of course there was Boys' Latin, that you watched winter days from the back windows, and listened to all spring as the band oom-pahed back and forth.

Occasionally a really expensive dinner out at Joseph's.

But more often, late dates at the Bradford Roof, when your man was delayed.

Or balcony seats for the 'hottest comedy in town.'

And then the goodnight . . . you hated to go in, it was such fun . . . but rules were rules, so you said goodnight.

Sitting around the tree.

Grand entrance—going downstairs.

Hot jazz in Alumnae.

May I have this waltz? The Christmas Formal.
